

Rako Studios » Media » Diamond-bullets » Building computers is like raising kids

Building computers is like raising kids

From Newegg user N/A comes this profound remark:

"Cons: People who give bad reviews because they are unable to make a simple video card function properly. They say they have a high level of tech knowledge and give a good product a bad review. These are the kind of people that put together their own computers

"then whine when they have a problem that was caused by their ignorance of the proper set-up of said computer. Just because you can physically put one together, doesn't mean you know how to configure it properly. Its kind of like having a child."